The San Michele ai Nuovi Sepolcri complex, also known as the Foppone dell'Ospedale or the Rotonda della Besana, is Milan's most original eighteenth-century building: the four-wing church presents a dome above the central octagon and is surrounded by a harmonious curvilinear colonnade. It was built between 1713 and 1725 and was intended to be a church and a cemetery. In 1809 Eugene Beauharnais wanted to turn it into a Pantheon, but there were no funds for the project. After several restoration works, it now houses an exhibition centre.
